My Joni Mitchell Journey

by Liz Tobey

I had never flown across the U.S. to attend a concert. Last weekend, I did just that, attending Joni Mitchell's concert at the Gorge Amphitheatre in Quincy, Wash., on Saturday, June 10. The 79-year-old Canadian-born singer/songwriter gave her first scheduled concert performance in 23 years.

I've loved Joni Mitchell's music ever since I borrowed my Dad's LP record of Ladies of the Canyon (1970) when I was 12. I'm the same age as that album. Throughout the decades, Joni's songs have traveled with me in good and bad times. Her Circle Game was my Dad's favorite song, so much so that we played it at his memorial service in 2022. I watched her 75th birthday concert on screen at the Old Greenbelt Theatre in 2018, never thinking I would ever have the opportunity to hear Joni sing.

This was no ordinary concert. Joni suffered a near-fatal brain aneurysm in 2015. Emergency surgery saved her life, but she had a long recovery, relearning how to speak, walk and play the guitar. As Joni recovered, her fellow musicians began holding monthly "Joni Jams" at her home in Los Angeles, where they would play Joni's and other songs. Washington-state native Brandi Carlile convinced Joni to make a surprise appearance onstage last July at the Newport Folk Festival.

When I heard last October that Joni would be returning again to the stage at the Gorge Amphitheatre on June 10 as part of Brandi Carlile's Echoes Through the Canyon weekend, I knew I had to go. I even sewed a shawl of sky blue, appliqued with images inspired by Joni's songs. I invited my friend Leslie, and on June 8, we flew from Washington Dulles to Seattle, rented a car and drove the next day to the Gorge. The amphitheater, which opened in 1986 is located 155 miles east of Seattle. The venue is built into the face of a canyon overlooking the Columbia River.

Small City Newspaper Has Need for Big-time Support

One of the primary duties of this newspaper is to report on city council. Like it or not, city council is pivotal in the quality of residents' lives. Its budget choices affect everything from the flower beds by the B-W Parkway ramp to dog park policy, from city facilities and policing to Buddy Attick Park. Its decisions on priorities affect residents' pockets and the budget it controls serves those in need, children in the summer and bus transportation year long, among many other things. Residents really need to know what's going on in council.

Nitty Gritty

From time to time the News Review is challenged to cover council's many meetings. Now is one of those times. There are typically two council meetings a month and sometimes as many as six worksessions. Regular meetings mean three or more hours of listening to the meetings and then some hours writing the story. Worksessions are usually shorter – about two hours is typical.

Currently, with only three reporters who routinely sign up for this duty, that's a lot of work. As a result, residents are missing somewhat-less-important meetings that they should nonetheless hear about.

Writing council stories is not a minor commitment and requires at least some background in how the council operates and, of course, the city's ongoing issues and concerns. Also, there are conventions to be learned about News Review style. We ask new reporters to work with a mentor to get them rolling. But if a few big-hearted souls signed up for just one story a month, it would be a boon to coverage and a welcome relief to the few of us (most of whom have other pressing newspaper responsibilities) now bearing the burden.

Can you help? If so, contact us at editor@greenbeltnewsreview.com or call 301-474-4131 between 2 and 4 p.m. on a Monday or Tuesday.

Watson Meets and Greets Greenbelt's Golden Agers

On June 16, County Councilmember Ingrid Watson, whose district includes Greenbelt, hosted a Meet and Greet luncheon with the Golden Age Club. It was a chance for senior citizens to meet Watson informally and discuss issues of importance. The wonderful buffet from Mission Barbeque was an added attraction.

As some of the seniors have limited walking abilities, Watson and her staff helped serve a number of the guests. She then provided a brief update on items of interest to Greenbelt seniors. Watson reflected on the current county budget, stating that over 60 percent is allocated for education, with an additional 25 percent for public safety. Much of the budget comes from individual Clear Backpack Requirement For Middle and High School?

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Parents have begun to receive a patchwork of ad-hoc mentions of a new requirement for middle and high school students to carry clear backpacks to school come the fall. Some schools within Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) have added clear backpacks to uniform and supply lists on their sites. Others haven't communicated the requirement with their families.

The school system itself mentioned the new requirement in a recent newsletter to PGCPS families on June 12, but it was under section IV "Activities for Teens" and easily missed by many. "While shopping for school supplies, don't forget that middle and high school students will require clear backpacks, starting this fall," that mention read.

A June 14 parent newsletter from Principal Portia Barnes at Eleanor Roosevelt High School announced, "Please be reminded that clear bookbags/backpacks are a requirement for all PGCPS high school students for next school year. Administration is looking to work with a PGCPS-approved vendor to sell to parents/students. More information is forthcoming."

A staff member at Greenbelt Middle School said they've heard of the requirement but couldn't provide further details. A representative from Dora Kennedy French Immersion (DKFI) said

From the Editor’s Desk

I read with sadness of the death of Daniel Ellsberg. A story about his life ran in Saturday’s Washington Post. For me it was reliving moments in the history of freedom of the press. In the case of the libel suit against the News Review by developer Charles Bresler, at our request for help, the Post asked their law firm Royall, Koegel, Rogers and Wells to take our case pro bono. The young lawyer the firm selected was Roger A. Clark. In May 1970 he won a unanimous decision in our favor from the U.S. Supreme Court saying the newspaper was performing its wholly legitimate function in reporting a public city council meeting.

A year later the New York Times and soon the Washington Post began publishing Ellsberg’s copies of the Pentagon Papers, detailing stories the government did not want the public to read. The Nixon administration then won a temporary injunction against further publication by the Post.

Clark led the fight for the Post and the New York Times to continue publishing the Pentagon Papers. The U.S. Supreme Court, by a six to three decision, sided with the newspapers.

Ellsberg went on to co-found the Freedom of the Press Foundation.

Asteroid City

In this Wes Anderson film, the itinerary of a Junior Stargazer/Space Cadet convention (organized to bring together students and parents from across the country for fellowship and scholarly competition) is spectacularly disrupted by world-changing events. Starring Jason Schwartzman, Scarlett Johansson, Tom Hanks, Jeffrey Wright, Tilda Swinton and Bryan Cranston. Said critic Katie Walsh of the Tribune News Service, “Anderson hasn’t just delivered his best film in years, he’s also managed to capture the zeitgeist in his own unique way.”

Persian Lessons

German with English subtitles

Set in occupied France in 1942, Persian Lessons follows Gilles (Nahuel Pérez Biscayart), a Belgian Jew who narrowly avoids sudden execution by swearing to the guards that he’s Persian, not Jewish. While the lie temporarily saves him, Gilles is then assigned the extraordinary task of teaching Farsi, a language he doesn’t know, to Koch (Lars Eidinger), the officer in charge of the camp’s kitchen who dreams of opening a restaurant in Iran once the war is over. Through an inspired and clever deception, Gilles not only manages to survive, but also devises an astonishing strategy to remember the names of his condemned brethren.

Grateful Dead Meet-Up at the Movies

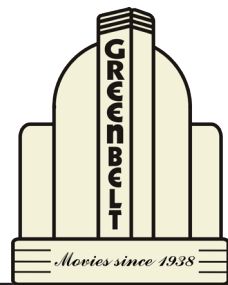

A year after Brent Mydland’s passing, the Grateful Dead returned to the summer stadium circuit, playing Chicago’s Soldier Field for the first time, with two keyboard players filling the seat Brent left vacant. Bruce Hornsby and Vince Welnick’s presence and musical contributions reinvigorated and revitalized the Grateful Dead, and the inspiration of the Dead’s playing was palpable. On a Saturday night in front of 60,000 fans, the Dead played what is often considered one of the greatest shows of the Bruce-Vince era, up there with the second Giants Stadium show from a few days earlier. From the original six-camera video feed that appeared on the stadium’s big screens and the pristine soundboard audio, Chicago 6/22/91 is an incredible performance start to finish.

Toy Story

Woody (Tom Hanks), a good-hearted cowboy doll who belongs to a young boy named Andy (John Morris), sees his position as Andy’s favorite toy jeopardized when his parents buy him a Buzz Lightyear (Tim Allen) action figure. Even worse, the arrogant Buzz thinks he’s a real spaceman on a mission to return to his home planet. When Andy’s family moves to a new house, Woody and Buzz must escape the clutches of maladjusted neighbor Sid Phillips (Erik von Detten) and reunite with their boy.

Correction

The headline for last week’s article on Corporal Matthew A. Inzeo receiving a lifesaving award suggested he is a Greenbelt Police officer. He is a Prince George’s County Police officer.

Food Rescue Group Needs Volunteers

Prince George’s County Food Equity Council (pgfec.org) has collaborated with Food Rescue US to prevent food waste. One such “rescue” is located right here in Greenbelt, our local Farmers Market, scheduled each Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. until mid-November. Two volunteers with two cars will show up around 1:45 p.m. and will check in with farmers and vendors to see if they would be willing/able at the close of the market to donate surplus food to a church-run food bank in Laurel. Volunteers will bring cardboard boxes to collect food, then drive for 15 minutes up to Laurel to drop off collected food to church staff, who will keep that food in cold storage until ready to distribute to those in need. If interested, one of the local Food Rescue volunteers, Joe Robbins (robbins629@gmail.com), is happy to answer any questions. Sign up at the following website: bit.ly/pgcfr_signup. The group’s motto is Be the Rescue.

Mosquito Tip of the Week

Statistics agree that neither sharks nor snakes, lions nor rhinos are the most dangerous animals on earth. The most deadly animal on earth is the mosquito, killing between 700,000 and one million people a year. Sharks, in comparison, kill between five and 10 people a year.

Mosquitoes, especially in the tropical regions of the planet, carry dangerous infectious diseases like malaria, Zika or dengue fever. These diseases kill hundreds of thousands of people, and sicken millions. A changing climate might bring these diseases closer to our doorsteps, too, which makes mosquito prevention and mitigation even more urgent. One cannot rely on pesticides to do the job: Pesticides are not very efficient in killing adult, flying mosquitoes and they have already led to the development of pesticide-resistant mosquitoes in some states of the U.S.

But there are ways to protect oneself: Be diligent and consistent in removing mosquito breeding sites from property. This will have a big impact on reducing the number of mosquitoes in the neighborhood, thus reducing the risk of mosquito-borne disease.

To learn more, to support this work and/or to volunteer, email GreenCAPS – Greenbelt Citizens Avoiding Pesticides, at GreenbeltGreenCAPS@yahoo.com.

Obituaries

Tal Brosh

Tal Brosh of Berwyn Heights died with his wife of 30 years Kathy (Besket) Brosh by his side on June 1, 2023. Born on September 18, 1964, in Israel, Tal came to the United States in 1990. Although Tal did not reside in Greenbelt, he was well known and loved by many Greenbelters. Tal's first job was as a cook at Beautiful Day Trading Co., a health food store and café located in College Park. It was there that he met Kathy. They later married and together they established a vegan/Mediterranean food cart called Pita Plus, situated in the heart of Takoma Park. It wasn't long before they established themselves as a favorite among the locals. As luck would have it, they were able to seize the opportunity to expand their business with the purchase of Beautiful Day Trading Co, the very café where they first met. The café became known as Berwyn Café, situated in the town of Berwyn. Most recently, Tal focused his talents working for Olive Tree Company, a hummus production and distribution company in Takoma Park owned and managed by Yaron Semitsky, Tal's friend with whom he grew up in Kibbutz Alonim in Israel. When not cooking, Tal loved to spend time at home gardening, playing his acoustic and electric guitars, fishing with his sons and watching his favorite soccer team, Liverpool. He was a devoted husband to Kathy and loving "Abba" (father) to his three sons. Tal is survived by his wife, Kathy; their three sons, Shawn, Jeremy and Daniel; sisters Galia Brosh, Inbal Barda and Lotem Ben-Shaul; and many nieces and nephews, both in Israel and the United States. Tal is predeceased by his father Yona and mother Ruti (Albeg) Brosh. A celebration of Tal's life will be held at a later time. An announcement will be posted in the News Review when the information is available.

Ric Gordon Elected to Board Of County's Municipal Assoc.

Greenbelt Councilmember Ric Gordon was elected to a one-year term on the Prince George's County Municipal Association (PGCMA) board as an at-large member representing Greenbelt as well as all 27 municipalities in the county. The at-large seat entails supporting the president and vice president of the association and the rest of the board to help it serve and support the county in various capacities. "As an active elected official, I am honored to serve the residents of the City of Greenbelt and all residents that reside in Prince George's County. Many thanks to my constituents who voted for me, and I look forward to working together doing the people's work," said Gordon. The PGCMA is an association of the county's elected and appointed municipal leaders working together to benefit the residents of 27 municipalities, Prince George's County and the State of Maryland.

Our sympathies to the family and friends of Sandra Dwiggin, who died June 16. Sandra will be remembered for her wonderful art and teaching, both of which she shared with the Greenbelt community. Condolences also to the family and many friends of Tal Brosh, who brought wonderful food, music, and warmth to so many. Send details of your news to editor@greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Local Author Amy Hansen Talks to Golden Age Club

by Mary Moien

The Greenbelt Golden Age club had a full house on May 31 to hear Greenbelt author Amy Hansen describe her writing activities and her successes as a science writer. Hansen loves science and majored in environmental studies and journalism in college. She has been in Greenbelt for 25 years, but in her earlier career she worked at newspapers in Ohio and Milwaukee. One of her earlier independent assignments was for Highlights for Children, a well-known children’s magazine.

There must have been a number of hopeful writers at the meeting, as Hansen was peppered with questions of how to get published. She described the difficult process of searching out possible writing gigs, writing up and submitting proposals and hopefully being hired for a specific project.

Hansen described having to think like a fourth grader (or younger) and think of information that they would want to know about the birds and mammals she writes about. She also writes stories for children about how machines and other inventions work.

It was a great presentation and Hansen was surrounded at the end of the meeting by members seeking even more information. To learn more details about Hansen and her writing, visit amyshansen.com.

Turn off Outside Night Lights, Then Step Outside After Dark

by Mary Ann Canter

Light is often necessary at night for safety, security and convenience, but does illumination extend to places where it serves little or no purpose? Are lights reaching into natural areas where they are not needed?

Light pollution is becoming an important issue as more and more people realize what is at stake. For insects with sensitive night vision such as fireflies and moths, even low levels of artificial light may be glaringly bright and disruptive.

For fireflies, darkness is necessary for their survival. If their environment is too bright to see the flash of a female, they cannot mate.

Adult Firefly - Photuris lucifescens

There are, however, ways to help the fireflies and minimize light pollution. Turn off outside lights just for their season, which is June to early July. Shield porch lights and turn them on only when needed by using a timer or a motion sensor. Bulbs that are dimmer or less white will also be helpful.

Turning lights off starting now will increase chances for seeing fireflies. Step outside, let your eyes adjust to the dark and enjoy the amazing natural light show.

Revisiting the Land of Oz
With GAC’s Current Play

by Carol Griffith

There are no scary wicked witches or flying monkeys in The Patchwork Girl of Oz, now playing at the Greenbelt Arts Center (GAC). Oz is now ruled by a kind princess, Ozma, a regal Jenna Jones Paradis, who is also the producer. The Tin Man and Scarecrow, whom we all remember from the 1900 book of the same name and the 1939 movie, are still in Oz, as is the Emerald City and the famous yellow brick road. But in this play Oz is now a fun and comical place, full of dancing, singing and fantastical characters. L. Frank Baum wrote The Patchwork Girl of Oz about halfway through his series of books about Oz in 1913 and perhaps decided to portray a different side of Oz.

In the story, magic had been outlawed in Oz but Dr. Pipt has secretly crafted a girl from a patchwork of scraps of fabric and has conjured magic spells to bring her to life. When Ojo the Unlucky (played winsomely by Zoe Northrup) and Unc Nunkie (a delightful Aref Dajani) visit Dr. Pipt, an accident turns Unc Nunkie to marble and gives the Patchwork Girl, now named Scraps, extra magical powers. To restore Unc Nunkie, Scraps and Ojo go on a quest for the ingredients for a new spell. Similar to Dorothy’s experiences in The Wizard of Oz, Scraps and Ojo meet many different and strange characters, have unbelievable and sometimes challenging experiences and, through their wits and teamwork, prove the underlying theme that honesty and kindness win the day.

While many of the performers who deserve accolades are well known and popular on the GAC stage, two newcomers deserve special mention. Ashira Cothron shows amazing abilities as she portrays, among other characters, a talking hopping toad. Marianne Virlnelson, as the exuberant Scraps, the Patchwork Girl, carries the show with her comedic talents.

Creative costuming and props add to the fun, and live piano and keyboard music by Christine Wells (music director and pianist) and the News Review’s own Pete Reppert round out a delightful play appropriate for children at heart.

GAC is located at 124 Centerway. Performances of The Patchwork Girl of Oz run about two hours with one 15-minute intermission. Performances will take place at 8 p.m. on the Fridays of June 23, 30 and July 7, and the Saturdays of June 24 and July 1 and 8. Matinees will be performed at 2 p.m. on Sundays June 25 and July 2. For tickets see greenbeltartscenter.org or call 301-441-8770. Masks must be worn by all audience members at all times.

“A Fall Into Redemption”

A memoir by longtime Greenbelt resident Tom Hibbs about his son Tyler’s remarkable but short life. It’s a memoir of compelling baseball stories and heartbreak, but ultimately of hope amidst terrible tragedy. Available at Amazon.

Hibbs Tells Story of Baseball, Addiction, Loss then Hope

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Thomas Hibbs grew up in Greenbelt. His son Tyler became a household name, an area baseball star, about to be drafted by the pros, when Tyler discovered drugs. As for so many families in the U.S., the opioid crisis played out in a devastating way for the Hibbs. Tyler died from a fentanyl overdose at the age of 27. Tom Hibbs recently published a book about his son, his remarkable baseball career, his experience with addiction and Hibbs’s ongoing message of hope, even amidst tragedy.

Thomas Hibbs’s parents moved to Greenbelt in 1964. He was one of six children living at 123 Lakeside Drive. He went to Parkdale High School because Eleanor Roosevelt High School hadn’t yet been built and Greenbelt was a wonderful place to grow up, he said. Thomas Hibbs planned to play baseball at the University of Maryland but a knee injury prevented him. He’s since had 12 operations on his left knee and back then, when he tore his ACL, there was no way to replace it. These days you see players come back after nine months, said Hibbs, but for him it was the end of a college baseball career. His brother-in-law was manager for a courier service and that’s what he began doing and still does. “It gave me incredible flexibility,” said Hibbs, who sees the positive side of his unintended career. He would be able to attend his children’s activities and watch their athletic games – both his sons played baseball and his youngest daughter was involved in competitive cheerleading.

By the age of 3 or 4 it was obvious that his oldest son, Tyler, had a “whip for an arm,” and he could tell he had a future in baseball, recalls his dad.

As a ninth grader, his first year in high school, Tyler was the starting pitcher in the state championship game for the school. In 10th grade he led Arundel High School to the state championship, and was named the Baltimore area Player of the Year. At 16 and 17 years old Tyler was twice on the U.S. national teams (the 16-and-under and 18-and-under teams). “He was going to be drafted for the pros,” said Hibbs.

The first call his parents received about Tyler using drugs was when he was 16 and he claimed he was “just trying it” and it was “never going to happen again.” But then the summer between his junior and senior year he was pulled over with baggies of marijuana and a scale. “Then all heck broke loose,” recalls Hibbs, whose family was inundated with calls from reporters. Hibbs remembers that he didn’t know what to say because he, like them, couldn’t understand why Tyler would risk everything when he had it all. He lost his chance to play baseball his senior year. He was kicked out of his high school and had to enroll instead in night school at Meade High School. His scholarship to Florida State was rescinded.

After Tyler’s arrest and after he spent some time at rehab, there were still colleges that wanted Tyler to play. “Coaches want to win, so they were willing to take a chance with him,” reflected Hibbs. Tyler went on to play at Tallahassee Community College, “and he did great but of course we were always worried – what’s he doing down there?” said Hibbs, who describes the experience of parenting and loving an addict as being on a rollercoaster: “You know, just up and down, up and down.”

“I would kind of joke and say I wish I could handcuff him to me so I knew where he was at all times, you know. And then slowly but surely, he got into the harder stuff,” said Hibbs. Tyler was thrown out of Tallahassee Community College but went on to two other colleges. The family hoped he’d make a comeback but Hibbs said he only really cared about being free from drugs.

The family had an intervention. They were advised to toe a hard line by a strict interventionist. Hibbs agreed but he always thought Tyler would acquiesce. Family members sat, cried and talked with him, and Tyler was given an ultimatum: if he didn’t go to rehab he’d be thrown out of the house. His father was shocked at the end of it, when the school’s administration had not yet received official communication about it from the system but they believe clear backpacks may be put in place for every grade at their school, which serves students from kindergarten through eighth grade.

District 2 Board member Jonathan Briggs, who has sat on the Policy and Governance Committee since mid-January, told the News Review this week that he had not seen a new policy requiring clear backpacks.

Asked about how requirements for middle and high school students would be implemented at K-8 schools, Briggs said it was “open to interpretation for parents and the community in schools like DKFI around what they should do.” Yet, he said, “it is likely that if you have a child that is middle school-aged or high school-aged, then you should plan to purchase a clear bookbag.”

Asked what would happen if students arrived at school with non-complying bookbags, Briggs referred the News Review to PGCPS administrative policy 5152, which states: “The intention of the Student Dress Code is to seek compliance from students, but implementation of the Code should avoid keeping students out of class. This may necessitate admitting students to school whose dress is not in compliance with the Student Dress Code, possibly retaining him/her in the office, and calling the parent/guardian to bring a change of clothing. Reasonable and prudent judgment should be utilized by school administrators in the enforcement of the System-wide Student Dress Code. Suspension is not expected to be used in the implementation and enforcement of the Student Dress Code, unless there are serious aggravating circumstances.”

Briggs agreed with the suggestion that a change in policy to require clear bookbags is likely motivated by safety concerns. “We have had big issues with drugs and violent incidents throughout the year,” he noted. He added that PGCPS is piloting a new security system in nine schools this summer, with plans to expand to other schools in the fall. “Hopefully, this will address the need for clear bookbags since the advanced system can detect objects on a person,” Briggs told the News Review.

A representative from the Office of the Board of Education suggested contacting the PGCPS CEO’s office, which had not responded by the time of press.

As Leslie and I drove east along I-90, we marveled at the Cascade Mountains, cloaked in fog and reminding us of a Chinese ink painting. The Cascades yielded to flat desert terrain dotted by sagebrush. We listened to Joni’s Amelia, which describes “traveling across a burning desert,” and a magpie swooped down over the car. Finally, we reached the Gorge Campground and pitched a tent near other campers. That night as I was falling asleep, I overheard our neighbors singing Joni’s A Case of You in angelic harmonies. I wondered if I had gone to heaven.

The next day Leslie and I went to a wine tasting at Cave B Winery overlooking the canyon. I was standing on the edge of a bluff and heard music echoing from the direction of the stage upriver. Suddenly, I heard voices singing. I realized that I was hearing Joni rehearsing Big Yellow Taxi. I delighted in Joni’s voice, deepened with age but clear and strong, “pouring music down the canyon.”

That evening, we waited in a line over a mile long just to enter the music venue. Brandi Carlile played the opening set. Then around 9 p.m. Joni took the stage, surrounded by a pantheon of other musicians, including Annie Lennox, Sarah McLachlan, Wendy Melvoin, Lisa Coleman and Marcus Mumford. The crowd of 27,000 gave Joni a standing ovation. The ensemble launched into Big Yellow Taxi, harmonizing on its chorus, “Don’t it always seem to go/That you don’t know what you’ve got ‘til it’s gone/They paved paradise/Put up a parking lot.”

Joni was onstage for three hours and the ensemble performed 24 songs. Joni sang lead vocals on many songs such as Amelia and Both Sides Now. Annie Lennox performed an ethereal Ladies of the Canyon and Sarah McLachlan sang Blue. The whole crowd joined Joni in singing The Circle Game.

Two moments resonated with me. The first occurred toward the concert’s end when Joni played her electric guitar on Just Like This Train and If. I marveled that she had taught herself to play her signature chords again by watching old videos. The second moment was when Joni and Brandi sang a duet on Shine which has the tag line, “Let your little light shine.” Brandi motioned to the audience to turn on their cell phone lights, and within seconds, the Gorge was lit up. Joni was visibly moved by the audience’s show of love, and exclaimed, “You look like a fallen constellation!”

It’s hard to put into words the feeling of love that reverberated through the Gorge that evening. It was an opportunity to say, “We love you!” and “Thank you!” to Joni Mitchell, a woman who embodies resilience and whose music has touched so many lives. I feel lucky to have made the 2,300-mile journey to see her.

LAWN & ORDER IS PLEASED to announce the results of the Fourth Annual Best-Yard Care Crew Contest in Greenbelt: It should be noted that both the contest and voting were conducted in a completely biased manner; bribery and false promises were considered legitimate tactics and voter participants were limited to the most satisfied customers. Of the total votes cast, the majority were disqualified due to late arrival or voter's failure to spell their own names correctly. After the controversy settled, the long-shot entrant of Lawn & Order was declared the winner for the fourth consecutive time. It is with great humility the Lawn & Order Crew accepts this honor and pledges to continue maintaining our high standards in serving the yard care needs of the Greenbelt community. So, call Lawn & Order at 240-264-7638. While other crews may be satisfied to rest upon their laurels after winning such a prestigious award, Lawn & Order is eager to expand our commitment to excellence.

his son said he wasn't ready to go to rehab. "I thought of course he would go," said Hibbs. Tyler's mother packed her son a sandwich and Tyler packed a suitcase.

Several days later Hibbs found Tyler in the playhouse in their yard. He was in the fetal position, covered in scabs. "I wasn't sure he was alive because he looked like he was dead," recalled Hibbs, who said he cried and held his son like a baby until he came to. Tyler agreed to go to the rehab and Hibbs drove him to a facility in Florida the very next day. There followed a period of improvement during which he was able to hold a job and called home regularly. But eventually the family received a call, which Tyler's brother Connor answered, informing them that Tyler was dead.

"I wanted the casket wide open," said Hibbs. "I wanted all his drug friends to come," he said, noting it was an area in which he'd disagreed with Tyler's mother. "I wanted everyone ... because it was real.... So it was crowded because he was well-known and I wanted it to be. I wanted everybody there to see a 27-year-old kid laying in a casket.... I know a lot of people were there that probably would never even step into a church, I'm sure of that and that's what I was hoping," said Hibbs. "It was a great service.... We were people of hope....We knew there is more to this story than that casket and him laying there."

A Message of Hope

The message of hope is one of the reasons he's written Tyler's story. With lots of parents going through similar struggles with children and addiction, Hibbs wants them to know that even in the worst-case scenario of his child's death, it's not the end. "There's a ton of families [suffering from the effects of addiction] – in particular fentanyl – they're saying 100,000 people a year are dying of fentanyl," notes Hibbs. He's had friends lose children to car accidents and addiction and seen them changed forever in the absence of hope. Though Tyler's addiction in some ways destroyed his family, said Hibbs, and though his marriage didn't survive their differences in how they wanted to handle Tyler and the stress they were under, he's still hopeful.

He is a Christian who believes in his son's redemption. Their conversations about Jesus, during which Tyler had cried as he asked how Jesus could love him. There's no scale, we're all sinners, said Hibbs. "That's where redemption occurred. [Tyler] understood; he got it. ... He still had an addiction. He still couldn't beat it," but his redemption was secure, believes Hibbs. "I felt like at that point his destiny was secure. Because he believed."

Writing Tyler's Story

Hibbs describes himself as "computer illiterate" and took about a year and a half to write the book. He dictated the story on his phone and sent it to his daughter, Shelby, in California to type.

"I know I'm not going to write any other books," he said, and the slow pace of the process helped him ensure he'd included everything he wanted and he learned how to edit on a computer. Asked if he believes readers would have to be a Christian to appreciate the hope he is trying to convey in his book, Hibbs doesn't think so. He also thinks people will be interested in reading about Tyler and baseball. "Especially in the Washington area ... he was a household name ... a lot of people know him." Though he doesn't know their belief system he thinks they'll enjoy reading Tyler's story. Tyler was very modest, said Hibbs. "He would hate that I did this because, quite frankly, I bragged about him a lot," Hibbs said of the baseball feats he wanted to share. However, "it's all truthful... everything in there was true, even the ugly stuff."

The Path to Addiction

Asked if he has any insight into what makes a child susceptible to addiction, Hibbs said that for his son it was his exposure to marijuana that led him to experiment with harder drugs, crack and then heroin. "I only can speak for Tyler," Hibbs said. "There's a lot of people that smoked marijuana all the time and they don't go any further, I understand that. But he said for him it was marijuana. He said, 'That was my gateway, once I had that I wanted to try something else and then I wanted to try something else.'" Hibbs stressed again that this wasn't a universal experience. "A lot of people don't go past (marijuana) so I don't want to say that's a gateway for everybody. But for him it was. And then once heroin grabs you...."

after violating his probation with alcohol. At Pathways alcohol and drug treatment center in Annapolis he noted the other patients were all under 40, telling his dad that he suspected it was because "nobody lives past 40 years old." Tyler wouldn't live to 30. "That's what's amazing," said Hibbs. "Somebody knows that this could very well kill him and probably will but yet that's how powerful it is. He knew it." His son's death was shocking but not surprising, said Hibbs, who had been saying for years it would end in tragedy. He always feared his son would get "the wrong stuff." "He told me 'Dad, it's like you haven't eaten for three weeks; that's the way you feel when you need something.'" Federal data from the Center for Disease Control and Prevention shows over 109,000 deaths from fentanyl last year, when drug deaths more broadly hit a new record.

Hibbs's book, Fall Into Redemption: The Tyler Hibbs Story came out in March and is available from most major book sellers.
